Dr. Joyce Shepherd, Chair; Dr. Rigsby, Dr. Trubitt, Dr. Vetter, Ivan Birch, Shari Valentine

Sociology is the systematic study of the social behavior of individuals as well as the working of social groups, organizations, cultures and societies. Study in sociology provides a scientific perspective for studying the effects of cultural and social forces on individuals, groups, and institutions. Students who major in sociology are given the opportunity to study in the field of family and gender relations, gerontology, crime and delinquency, as well as sociological theory, research methodology, and statistics. Graduates are prepared for positions in industry, government, private and public agencies, and in education and research organizations.

Sociology is an especially appropriate major or minor for students entering any of the helping professions. For those who wish to become professional sociologists, an excellent preparation for graduate school is available.

Students selecting the Human Services major typically desire positions in institutions, private and public, which provide direct services to diverse groups in our society. Students who major in human services are given the opportunity to study in the field of family and gender relations, gerontology, crime and delinquency, as well as, research methodology, and statistics. Graduates are prepared for positions in industry, government, private and public agencies, and in education and research organizations. They will be confronting the human consequences of problems such as crime, poverty, alcoholism, child abuse, and discrimination. The curriculum includes required and elective courses, advising, and a supervised field experience in one or more human service agencies. Graduates will also have the choice of pursuing advanced study in fields such as social work, administration, counseling, psychology, and sociology.

The Sociology Department offers certificate and minor in gerontology which prepares students to understand the aging process, needs of the elderly, programs that are accessible for the elderly, and the issues of death and dying. The Gerontology Program prepares to work with various community, state, and private agencies. Contact person, Dr. Joyce Shepherd (email shepherj@hsu.edu).

A minor in anthropology is offered which provides students with an opportunity to examine the discipline as a possible area of graduate study. In addition, exposure to field experience in archeology is possible.

A popular minor, instruction in sociology provides an excellent foundation and support for the education of teachers, nurses, and managerial science majors. The department encourages and supports interdisciplinary study, recognizing the usefulness of sociology for students with primary interests in another discipline.

Sociology and Human Services offer an interdisciplinary minor in Criminal Justice. The Criminal Justice profession seeks to encompass the preservation and protection of social order in a free society. It includes principles such as democracy, law, civil liberties, and procedural processes safeguarding citizens against intimidation, oppression and crime. The curriculum is based upon the University's liberal arts core and is designed to prepare students for higher education and entering careers in criminal justice. We focus upon helping students achieve: knowledge and reasoning, the integration of ability and skills, professional conduct and ethics, and a vision for the future of the profession that can adapt as society does.

Sociology and Human Services offer an interdisciplinary minor in Human Services.

The Department of Sociology and the Department of Family and Consumer Sciences jointly administer an interdisciplinary minor in child and family dynamics. Contact persons for this program are Dr. Herman Gibson, chair of sociology and human services (email shepherj@hsu.edu) and Dr. Patti Miley, chair of family and consumer sciences (email mileyp@hsu.edu).

Criminal Justice

The mission of the Criminal Justice Program at Henderson State University is to advance theory, practice, and cause of criminal justice through scholarship, teaching, training, and technical assistance in responding to the needs of students, criminal justice professionals, and society. The criminal justice programs are administered through the Department of Sociology and Human Services, Ellis College of Arts and Sciences. The Department offers a minor in Criminal Justice and a major, Bachelor of Arts in Criminal Justice. Each program is embedded in a liberal arts education.

Bachelor of Arts in Criminal Justice

The academic program for the criminal justice major requires 120 credit hours. The Department's goal for the criminal justice major program is being committed to high quality instruction.

The major program consists of two options. Option I follows an academic classroom model, preparing the student for either entry to employment, or for advanced graduate or professional studies. This option requires a 15 hour class component with a required writing intensive capstone in which the student will exemplify the knowledge of and application of theory, conceptualization, research methods, operationalization, observations, and data processing and analysis in a directed project followed by an oral presentation. Option II provides the student with an alternative service learning experience that includes a 15 hour field practicum enhancing employability. This option prepares the student for entry level criminal justice jobs.

Option I is designed to provide those students wishing to pursue a graduate or other professional degree with a firm foundation in research design, statistics, and sociological and criminological theory. Option II is designed to provide those wishing to directly enter a criminal justice career with the professional skills to analyze criminal justice and criminological issues through academic and applied settings.

Human Diversity Minor

The undergraduate minor in human diversity provides students with a broad intellectual framework for understanding common human experience and differences. Courses fulfilling this requirement foster respect for the diversity of people and cultures within the bond of humankind. This minor examines differences and similarities in individual human behavior as related to issues such as race, ethnicity, gender, gender roles, creed, religion, culture, age, body type, physical conditions, sexual orientation, learning differences, social skills differences, intelligence level, regional differences, language, dialect, socioeconomic status, and other areas of individual and group differences.

The minor is jointly administered by the departments of Psychology and Sociology. Students are required to take 18 hours of coursework including Human Diversity (PSY 2373); Racial and Cultural Minorities (SOC 2193); Social Psychology (either SOC 3143 or PSY 3063 — although we normally stress the deep differences between these two classes, for purposes of this minor either provides a useful foundation for considering interactions with diverse people); and nine hours of electives.

To promote exposure to a variety of perspectives on diversity issues, no more than nine of the 18 hours may come from a single discipline. Psychology and sociology students may not use classes from their respective majors to count toward the electives for this minor. Because studies in human diversity should include interaction with one's fellow human beings, no coursework completed by distance learning (correspondence or Internet) may count toward this minor.
